

CENTER FOR THE STUDY OF THE AMERICAN CONSTITUTION

csac.history.wisc.edu > Document Collections > The Creation and Ratification of the Bill of Rights > Events Related to the Creation and Ratification of the Bill of Rights > The Harrisburg Convention Attempts to Amend the Constitution

James Madison to George Washington New York, 14 September 1788 (excerpt)

. . . The meeting at Harrisburg is represented by its friends as having been conducted with much harmony & moderation. Its proceedings are said to be in the press, and will of course soon be before the public. I find that all the mischeif apprehended from Clinton's circular letter in Virginia will be verified. The Antifederalsts lay hold of it with eagerness as the harbinger of a second Convention; and as the Governor [Virginia Governor Edmund Randolph] espouses the project it will certainly have the co-operation of our Assembly. . . .

CITE AS: John P. Kaminski et al., eds., The Documentary History of the Ratification of the Constitution, Vol. XXXIX: Bill of Rights [3] (Madison, Wis.: Wisconsin Historical Society Press, 2023), 188.