

CENTER FOR THE STUDY OF THE AMERICAN CONSTITUTION

csac.history.wisc.edu > Document Collections > Confederation Period > The Events and Impact of Shays Rebellion > Public Commentary After the Rebellion

Worcester Magazine, Fourth Week in May 1787

We are credibly informed, by persons from the State of Vermont, that the leaders in the late Rebellion, assembled, a few days since, a number of men, to the amount, it is said, of about 200, chiefly of those who had fled from this State; but the authority in Vermont ordered them to disperse, and they dispersed accordingly. It is said their intention was to come into this State and renew their nefarious designs. The conduct of Vermont, in this instance, and others, respecting the Rebellion, is spoken of much to its credit. Rhode-Island! Rhode-Island only, as a State, is the only one that has, by its proceedings, encouraged Treason and Rebellion!

CITE AS: John P. Kaminski et al., eds., The Documentary History of the Ratification of the Constitution, Vol. XIII: Commentaries on the Constitution, Public and Private [1] (Madison, Wis.: Wisconsin Historical Society Press, 1981), 95.