

CENTER FOR THE STUDY OF THE AMERICAN CONSTITUTION

csac.history.wisc.edu > Document Collections > The Constitutional Convention >
Assessments of Individual Delegates > George Washington

Boston American Herald, 19 November 1787

A correspondent asks, Whether the friends to the New Plan ought so frequently to call to their aid the name of WASHINGTON, when it is a fact as notorious as it is true, that this Great Man never gave an opinion upon the subject in Convention, and honoured it with his Signature merely in his capacity of PRESIDENT of that Body.

CITE AS: John P. Kaminski et al., eds., The Documentary History of the Ratification of the Constitution, Vol. IV: Massachusetts [1] (Madison, Wis.: Wisconsin Historical Society Press, 1997), 272–73.