

CENTER FOR THE STUDY OF THE AMERICAN CONSTITUTION

csac.history.wisc.edu > Document Collections > Religion and Ratification > Clergy and the Constitution > Concerns Over Clergy Involvement

Henry Jackson to Henry Knox Boston, 11 November 1787 (excerpt)

my dear Harry

. . . Mr. Gerrys Letter has done much mischief in this State as to the adoption of the proposed Federal Constitution—it has given great strength to the small, very small party that were in the opposition—he has gone for the Vote, as this measure will either damn him, or place him at the head of a restless and uneasy junto in the government—his friends and Circle in which he moved in this quarter, are exceedingly displeased with him, and with them he has lost all their confidence.—had he been under the necessity of writing the Letter, every allowance would have been made for him, which was not the case, as it appears to have originated in his officious brain—however the System stands firm & well as yet, and have no doubt but it will be finally adopted in this State—this is sentiments of all the leading and influential Men.—

We intend sending a good Representation from this Town to the State convention—Govr. Hancock, Govr. Bowdoin, & Gentlemen of that class and reputation—we shall also send the Revd. Mr. Stillman—he is a high Federal Man, & charmed with the proposed plan.—he being at the head of the Baptists in this State, and of great influence among them, it is thought policy to choose him one of the Deligates by which means we shall gain that whole Sect in favor of it. . . .

CITE AS: John P. Kaminski et al., eds., The Documentary History of the Ratification of the Constitution, Vol. IV: Massachusetts [1] (Madison, Wis.: Wisconsin Historical Society Press, 1997), 215.